About Sweden's Innovation Ecosystem Summit (Sveriges Innovationsriksdag)

Sveriges Innovationsriksdag is the Swedish Incubators & Science Parks (SISP) annual meeting arena, an event that brings together the core of Sweden's national and regional profiles from innovation environments, politics, business, academia, and society to exchange experience and knowledge in business development, innovation management, development of policies for innovation and the creation of interaction between start-ups and large companies.

This year's theme is Future Societies, Energy Transition and Planetary Resources. The purpose of the conference is to gather the innovation industry. The conference takes place at Ideon Science Park in Lund on 21-23 March 2023 and gathers approximately 450 participants.

Lund Innovation District

Lund has been a prominent innovation district for more than a thousand years. Lund University is one of the largest universities in the Nordics and is ranked among the top 100 universities in the world, closely connected to Ideon Science Park the largest science and business park in Northern Europe with 10,000 employees in 400 businesses. These multi-faceted pillars make Lund a unique innovation district combining culture, city life and research within a radius of only 2 kilometres.

The Swedish national synchrotron laboratory MAX IV and ESS (the European Spallation Source - expected to be in operation from 2027) are also located in this area. In between these facilities sits Science Village, which is being developed as a new geographic area focusing on materials research and housing Lund Nano Lab and other research facilities.

With research and entrepreneurship going hand in hand, the district is the birthplace of innovation game changers such as the wireless communication standard Bluetooth, the artificial kidney, and the respirator. Lund Innovation District attract brilliant researchers, students, and entrepreneurs with a drive to change the world for the better by turning bold ideas into reality.
